GOOD NEWS: HOPE IS COMING!

hhi.org/goodnews

With your partnership, transformation is possible.

Your contribution to our $35,000 goal will ensure that two villages will receive a water well, agriculture and business training, and educational support for kids. Be a part of the solution.

I've had the immense honor of photographing and filming the people, places, and work of Healing Hands International since 2022. During my recent visit to Northern Uganda, I traveled with HHI Coordinator Joseph Edema. Walking into Lugeperi felt different than many of the villages I've visited before.

Lugeperi is a dramatic setting where traditional grass thatched huts are tucked around large rock outcroppings, and towering palm trees provide little shade from the intense heat. It was nearing the end of their dry season and the crop fields were dry and bare. As we walked through the village, we were led by an elder and a group of women to their nearest water source.

They stopped near a tree along a hillside, removing some dead palm branches used to cover a small pool of dirty water. The murky water didn't appear to be much more than the volume of water in a kitchen sink. Unable to immerse their jerrycans in the water, they used a small bowl to gather water and pour it into their containers.

I had never seen anything quite like this. I asked to see other nearby water sources. The elder shook his head and said all the others had dried up. As I pressed them for answers on how this tiny water source could sustain their village of over 500 people, they pointed across the valley and said there was a small stream where some go to gather water (it looked several miles away). None of these answers even came close to satisfying the jarring need of Lugeperi.

Without accessible water, families can't properly irrigate their crops, women are consumed with collecting water to drink and bathe with, and kids can't afford school fees.

As my mind reeled with the realities of life in this village, I tried to capture images of people in their daily life. Nearing a hut I was welcomed with warm smiles and laughter from kids. It was this striking human experience, that in spite of overwhelming need, I met individuals with big personalities and smiles. The kids overflowed with hope and excitement about our visit, and leaders intentionally honored us with the gift of a live chicken, just because we took the time to come there.

This village desperately needs water (and so much more), perhaps more urgently than I have ever seen with my own eyes. But the momentum to help is not sorrow, but overwhelming love. Connecting with people God carefully created and knows by name evokes a sacred desire to reach out and heal the brokenness that hems them in. Through Healing Hands International, we have the collective ability to do just that. Joining together in the name of Jesus and sharing our resources means that children in Lugeperi will grow up in a very different reality. A reality that begins with a flowing source of eternal life and brings transformation for the whole village.

DISASTER RESPONSE UPDATE

Three years ago, on February 6, 2023, a devastating 7.8-magnitude earthquake struck southeastern Türkiye and parts of northern Syria, leveling entire neighborhoods across 11 provinces. More than 55,000 lives were lost, and countless families were left displaced, grieving, and searching for stability in the aftermath.

Because of your generosity, Healing Hands International was able to respond to meet both immediate and lasting needs. Together, we helped provide immediate relief through clean water, distributing hygiene kits, blankets, and clothing, and supporting churches that opened their doors to shelter families. As relief turned into recovery that support transitioned into play-therapy tents for children processing trauma. Finally, we recently wrapped up our response by helping build a ministry center in Adiyaman, which includes a warehouse, large kitchen, and lodging spaces. We praise God that it will serve the Adiyaman community for years to come.

The voices of those impacted offer a glimpse into what that support has meant. One church member expressed a desire that “one day we will meet face to face... and worship the Lord together,” while also sharing the hope of reminiscing: “You may not know me, but I prayed for Adiyaman. And there, before the Lord, we will recognize and rejoice with one another.” Others expressed simple but deeply sincere gratitude, saying, “We are so thankful... thank you for helping from such far away places.”

Those same stages of disaster response and compassion have started again more recently in the Caribbean following Hurricane Melissa. Be on the lookout in future issues for updates on these efforts.
